Shannon's cousin e-mailed her a collection of photos that showed some unique street art. Shannon wanted to know more about the artist who created the pieces. After doing some research, she wrote the following paper. Read Shannon's paper and look for any corrections she should make. Then answer the questions that follow.

Pavement Picasso

(1) Walking down crowded urban streets comes natural for most city dwellers. (2) They usually move quickly, expertly navigating the busy sidewalk and making split-second decisions about where to step and where not to. (3) But on some city streets, people may be fooled into avoiding a hazard that isn't even there, especially if Julian Beever has been in town. (4) Called the "Pavement Picasso," Beever is a British artist who takes his artwork to the streets. (5) Working with chalk on city sidewalks, he creates startling drawings that appear to be three-dimensional. (6) A meticulous artist, Beever has been known to take several days to complete a single piece of street art. (7) Then in a matter of hours, the drawing is often trampled on by muddy boots or washed away by rain. (8) But this doesn't concern Beever, who says, "I'm working toward building a photograph as my end result, and if I get that, I'm happy."

(9) Beever begins each unique creation by sketching a draft on a piece of paper. (10) He then sets up a camera on a tripod close to the patch of sidewalk where he plans to work. (11) Beever moves back and forth between the pavement and the camera, he carefully checks every mark that he makes. (12) He must be diligent about perspective because the art he's creating relies on an optical illusion. (13) When viewed from an angle other than the one intended, it's greatly distorted. (14) A drawing that stretches across 30 feet of pavement may appear to be only 3 feet tall when viewed from the right angle. (15) That's why the camera is so important. It helps Beever focus on the view that will keep the drawing in life.
